He referred to the benefits the United States had derived from European emigration and said that the education of the masse was needful to the promotion of the country's prosperity; that it was better to leave the mines of Pennsylvania and Colorado enexplored than not to look for gining at the 22d verse and the 6th the riches and never-to-be-exhausted reasure of the mind. He attributed America's greatness to the fact that about loath to accord national importance to remarks and lead the congregation a hundred years ago popular government was established here and has ever since been maintained. The spirit of liberty een in our country a class of men who distrusted the people and did not believe in their capacity for self-government. This class still exists among us. True, few openly express such opinions, but they are uttered in private and they pow-erfully influence our parties. The Pres-dent of the United States has during the last to weeks sent to Congress veto after veto, which are based on the opinion tha if left to themselves the people will not protect the ballot-box. A little while ago the Legislature of this State proposed to take from the people in one of our cities the right of self-government, and so there are some who oppose popular education. The spirit which decries popular education, and which demands that armed soldiers shall surround the polling places, is the same spirit which urged George 111 to tax the colonies;
